"The Stafford Family Scrapbook" by Ron Ulm, August 2023 MINI-AR(HIVE &A(KGROUND NOTE)

What follows are a selection of photographs and newspaper clippings giving a "slice-of-life" of the pioneer Stafford family of Wilton Manors.

These were curated from a larger collection of digital images and documents donated to WMHS by Nancy Stafford. The first collection consisted of unedited digital images, mostly photographs, given to WMHS in 2011/2012. These remained uncatalogued and unprocessed until August 2023, when Nancy donated a new collection of unscanned material--mainly documents and newspaper clippings.

That inspired this project, to enhance/curate both the original and new collections and make them available as an abridged "mini-archive" on our web site.

The first documents will provide you with an insight into the family history. The remaining pages are chronological—oldest to newest.

[With permission of Nancy Stafford, images/materials that had been previously reported/published or available on other archival sites, or not of general historical interest, were not retained. Paper documents were recycled. Unused digital files deleted. RAU 08/2023]

Remembering Wilton Manors First Councilwoman: Marcia Stafford

by Mary Ulm of the Wilton Manors Historical Society

Wilton Manors Pioneer Marcia Stafford passed away on January 15, 2011 at age 89. A fourth generation Floridian born in Miami, she served as a City of Wilton Manors elected official for over two decades, first as City Clerk for eight years and then as a Council Member for over 14 years. No other Wilton Manors elected official exceeds her tenure.

one-year old son Tracy moved to Wilton Marcia Stafford with her then-all male colleagues in 1962.

Manors in 1949 when the village was two years old. Leslie Stafford, an office manager with the Eli Witt Cigar and Tobacco Company, performed much of the construction on the family home on NE 25th Street. Marcia took great pride in her husband's handy work.

Village Mayor Dave Turner had donated land upon which to build an elementary school, but county school board officials balked at the idea that a school was needed in Wilton Manors. With other young mothers, Marcia persisted in trying to change that opinion, aided at times by the restless fidgeting and vocalizations of young toddler Tracy.

In 1952, at the urging of Mayor Dave Turner, Stafford ran and won a three-way race for City Clerk – a position she held until 1960. While Council meetings were held at the Village Hall, much of the rest of City business was conducted at the Stafford home until the first City Hall with real offices opened in 1957. Thus, daughter Nancy, born in 1954, and young Tracy spent their formative years amidst the constant comings-and-goings of Wilton Manors citizens and politicians.

In 1961, Marcia became the first woman to serve on the Wilton Manors City Council. An intelligent, witty, and charismatic public servant, she held the citizens' confidence for a record 14 years and 10 months. "I can think of no one who gathered as much good will for the City as Marcia Stafford," recalls long-time resident Nancy Sawallis. "Marcia was well liked by everyone." Wilton Manors Woman's Club President Gwen Thompson agrees, saying: "She was a wonderful inspiration and a long-time club member."

No doubt Marcia could have continued her long and successful run as the only female on the City Council had she not chosen a different course for her career. In 1975, she resigned as Councilwoman to support son Tracy's bid for a position on that body; a seat he ultimately won.

During her long tenure as an elected public official, Marcia Stafford participated in the addition of a water system, sewer system, roads, parks and recreation facilities as the city's population grew from 1,500 in 1952 to well over 10,000 in 1975. However, her "true claim to fame", as she wrote in a short biography in 1991, was her and Leslie's children, "...who reflect the home town atmosphere in which they grew up". Son Tracy has led a distinguished career as an attorney, Wilton Manors City Council Member and Mayor, and State Representative. Daughter Nancy was crowned Miss Florida in 1976. She is an accomplished actress, motivational speaker, and author.

After leaving elected office, Marcia continued to enrich the Wilton Manors community by teaching kindergarten and reading to children in the Wilton Manors public library. Leslie Stafford retired in 1977 and Marcia joined him in retirement several years later. Leslie died in 1995. Modest to the end, and ahead of her time in combining career and family, Marcia Stafford has left an indelible stamp on the city in which she resided for more than 60 years.

WILTON MANORS HISTORICAL SOCIETY

TRACY EUGENE STAFFORD was born in Wilton Manors, Fla., in 1948, to Marcia and Leslie Stafford. He has a sister, Nancy Stafford Myers. He graduated from Fort Lauderdale High School and attended the University of Florida, receiving a bachelor's degree in English literature and a juris doctorate degree.

He was engaged in a private law practice and in 1981 became a council member of the City of Wilton Manors. In 1982, Stafford became the city administrator for Wilton Manors, later serving as its mayor, from 1986 to 1990. He served in the Florida House of Representatives from 1992 to 2000.

Stafford is a member of Phi Kappa Psi Florida Beta Chapter. His current commitments include chair of the House Juvenile Justice Committee, Broward County Legislative Delegation, the Florida Advisory Council on Intergovernmental Relations, and the House Judiciary Committee.

Stafford is a fifth-generation Floridian. His father, Leslie Stafford, worked for the Eli Witt Company, a tobacco and candy company. He performed much of the construction on the family home. His mother, Marcia Stafford, served as a kindergarten teacher and as a City of Wilton Manors elected official for more than two decades.

While council meetings were held at the Village Hall, much of the rest of city business was conducted at the Stafford home until the first City Hall with real offices opened in 1957. Thus, Stafford and his younger sister, Nancy, spent their formative years amidst the constant comings and goings of Wilton Manors citizens and politicians.

As a youngster, he liked to ride his bicycle around town within the limits set by his parents, bounded by Andrews Avenue and Oakland Park Boulevard. People around town, even people his mother barely knew, would call if they saw him somewhere outside his limits. Everyone looked out for one another's children in those days.

In 1964, while he was still in high school, he began selling Amway and did well, he thinks, because of the goodwill of his customers toward a young man such as himself. A special memory from his high school days involved long time Wilton Manors' resident, Millie Laughlin, who wanted to reward him for his industrious nature. He asked if Millie's sister, who was a secretary for President Truman, could get him an autograph from President Truman. Stafford received both an autographed picture and a letter signed by Harry Truman. The letter commended him for his hard work and love of history.

NANCY ELIZABETH STAFFORD, a fifth-generation Floridian, was born in Wilton Manors in 1954. She was raised in a household that was actively involved in the community. Her father, Leslie Stafford, worked for the Eli Witt Company and was a Wilton Manors political activist. Her mother, Marcia Stafford, served as a kindergarten teacher and as a City of Wilton Manors elected official for more than two decades, first as City Clerk for eight years and then as a council member for more than 14 years. Both Nancy and her brother, Tracy, grew up in a household bustling with the citizens and politicians of Wilton Manors.

Selfdescribed as a gangly, shy and studious young girl, Nancy recalls that she lived at the Wilton Manors Public Library, located directly across from her family home. She attended Fort Lauderdale High School and graduated in 1972. From there, she attended the University of Florida where she earned a degree in journalism in 1975.

In 1976, she became Miss Florida. She competed in the 1977 Miss America pageant and began a career in New York City as a top model with the Ford Modeling Agency. She appeared in more than 250 commercials before beginning her 25-year acting career. Local audiences will remember her as the spokesperson for City Furniture.

Stafford has become a prolific character actress, speaker and author. Although she and her husband, Larry Myers, live in Southern California, she makes time to visit her childhood home several times a year. She has added her "star power" to numerous City of Wilton Manors events, including serving as a grand marshal for the city's 50th Anniversary celebration. In 2009, she was selected among an impressive field of actors as the "perfect match" to narrate The Stranahan House, a South Florida Public Television (WPBT2) documentary.

RESOLUTION NO.

A RESOLUTION COMMENDING MARCIA STAFFORD, CITY CLERK OF THE CITY OF WILTON MANORS, AND ESTAB-LISHING COMPENSATION.

WHEREAS, MARCIA STAFFORD, City Clerk of the City of Wilton Manors, has served the City for a long period of time commencing March 10, 1951, and

WHEREAS, her duties have continued to expand and increase with the growth and development of the City and she has over a period of years assumed and undertaken these increased duties and responsibilities with great efficiency, and

WHEREAS, it is the desire of the City Council to express its deep appreciation for the manner in which the work and duties of the City Clerk's office have been performed, and does further desire to adjust the City Clerk's salary to more adequately reflect the services rendered by the said City Clerk to the City of Wilton Manors;

NOW, THEREFORE, BE IT RESOLVED BY THE CITY COUNCIL OF THE CITY OF WILTON MANORS:

SECTION I

That the City Council does hereby express its deep appreciation to and does hereby commend the City Clerk for the manner in which she has over the years past conducted herself in office and performed the work and duties thereof.

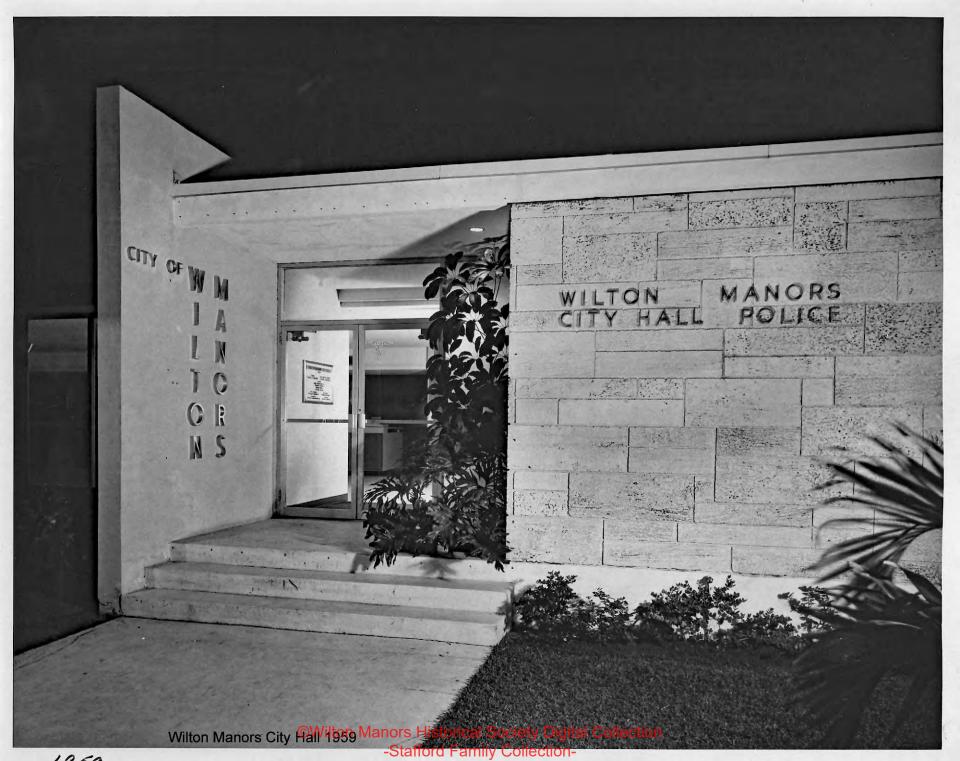

SECTION II

That commencing with the next regular pay period, the City Clerk shall receive compensation of One hundred ten Dollars ($110.00) per week.

ADOPTED on this _____ day of October, A.D. 1958.

President of Council APPROVED:

ATTEST:

January 13th, 1960

The City Council City of Wilton Manors Florida

Gentlemen:

It is with sincere regret that I leave my duties as Clerk of this little City which I love so much.

My ambitions for this City are the highest and if any good for Wilton Manors can come as a result of my removal from office I shall accept that decision with no malice toward anyone connected with my dimmissal.

I consider it the highest honor to have been your City Clerk for the past seven years. You may rest assured that at all times I have conducted myself and my office with dignity and respect for my office.

Sincerely yours,

Marcia Stafford.

Politics

Editor, The News:

Prior to the Wilton Manors election an article appeared in The News that a reporter from your paper had polled each candidate running for office of councilman regarding how he felt about retaining City Clerk Marcia Stafford in office. It was reported that each one felt she should be reappointed.

What happened?

After the new council was sworn in, the first order of business was a motion by one of these councilmen to remove Mrs. Stafford from the position of City Clerk and appoint the ex-mayor, J. Frank Starling.

Of these four men elected, only one, Mr. George C. Nichols, proved to be a man of his word and voted against the above motion. These new councilmen soon found out how those present at the meeting felt about how much the word of each new councilman amounted to. Not one of the four who voted to remove Mrs. Stafford would give one reason why they did so. We on the outside know why!

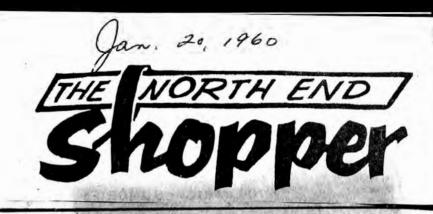

There is an old saying "There's something rotten in Denmark." Anyone at the Wilton Manors Council Meeting of January 13th found out that you don't have to go to Denmark to find something wrong.

Of the 3,073 qualified voters only 43 per cent cast their vote on election day and I know by now a large number of this 43 per cent (if they had known what was going to take place on Wednesday after election day) never would have cast their votes as they did.

What should be done is a poll of the 57 per cent who did not vote and form a Voters League. Include in this League the portion of the 43 per cent who now wish they had not voted as they did and, according to the charter, recall these four councilmen and the Mayor. This should be done—and without delay! These men have proven that their word is not worth too much and with this type to handle the money and affairs of the city I wonder what shape the city will be in at the end of two years.

In the old days a man elected to a public office was known as a public servant, but not so today. A man elected to public office has become NOT A PUBLIC SERVANT, BUT A PUBLIC NUISANCE!!

C. WILSON BROWN

WILTON MANORS RESIDENTS

The inhumane way in which the New City Council fired the Vetern City Clerk, Marcia Stafford, should be brought to the attention of all the people of W ilton M anors.

The Council retired to an Illegal Private M eeting leaving Mrs. Stafford at the citizens table facing a crowded roomof citizens, for a inhumanly long and embarrassing time.

On returning, they proceeded, in spite of a parade of Former Council Presidents, and Citizens who took their turn at the microphone to voice their objections and their opinions on the meager qualifications of the the Council's proposed new City Clerk, former Mayor Starling. These men Mc Cully, Beimly, and Hanrahan along with new Mayor Price did not have the courtesy to forwarn or notify Mrs.Stafford of their intended action, After being reported in the Press that they were satisfied with her long and Faithful service. Is this the type of Service they will give the people they represent. In fairness it must be stated that Councilman Nichols cast the lone objecting Vote.

> THIS SPACE PAID FOR BY CITIZENS WHO BELIEVE IN FAIR PLAY

It's a great feeling to live in a wealthy town.

Wilton Manors bad a good reputation of solvency when I moved there in 1958 but I didn't learn until a few days ago just how rich the thriving community really is.

My eyes were shocked open when councilmen — excepting George Nichols — voted themselves 400 per cent pay raises. And, to keep the mayor in check, council members gave him a 240 per cent salary boost.

The raises themselves, from $300 to $1,200 for the councilmen and from $500 to $1,200 for Mayor Harold Price, are not so enormous even though the percentages are.

Last Legislature Changed Charter

Nevertheless, the manner in which the councilmen went about fattening their wallets shows they believe the city's treasury is so full of money that they can buck a long-standing policy without incurring the wrath of the city's taxpayers.

This policy, which was a part of the city charter until someone got the 1959 Legislature to take it out, was that councilmen would not vote themselves raises. Any raise would have to be approved at least two months ahead of an election and take effect after the balloting.

When these men sought and won council seats, they knew their pay would be $300 a year. Apparently they thought it enough to campaign for the positions.

But after only one month in office, they suddenly decided 1 they are worth four times that much.

To questions raised by this high-handed disregard for policy, customs habit or what-have-you, Councilman John Hanrahan replied that Wilton Manars officials should be paid at least as much as the councilmen of reighboring Oakland Park.

Now What About The People

One observer took this to mean that Wilton Manors intends to "keep up with the Joneses." If that is the case, can Wilton Manors residents look forward to a city beach, marina, auditorium,

Council members also showed a complete disregard for tax money when they fired Mrs. Marcia Stafford as city clerk and hired Frank Starling, former mayor, in her place. Mrs. Stafford beept all the city records berself, including taking misutes at all official meetings.

Starling can't take the minutes. He doesn't know how.

Therefore, Council has to use a secretary to do that -a needless duplication which Council could have avoided had it had the business acumen to keep Mrs. Stafford on the payroll.

Another way in which the city shows its opulence is by having two auditors — a husband wife team — who apparently audit each other. She is paid $110 a week full-time and he gets $25 a day at least two days a week for auditing his wife's audit. Isn't that cozy?

Starling Wants A Raise

As city clerk, Starling makes $110 a week — the same amount as the full-time auditor. Observers report, however, that Starling is champing at the bit for a large raise although he snapped up the $110 job the first time it was offered. Now that he is safely ensconced in City Hall, the pay is too small for him, it is reported. Better he should quit!

Now that it's evident Wilton Manors has an over-abundance of money, city dwellers will be expecting a tax cut next year. A big cut.

And the Broward County Commission undoubtedly will be expecting Willon Manors to withdraw its request for financial belp in repaying NE 26th St. It isn't a county road, being entirely within the eity limits, but Willon Manors asked for belp anyway.

With so much money lying around idle and with Council looking for ways to spend it, NE 26th St., a boulevard of bumps, would be a good place for them to start.

As I said at the beginning, it's a great feeling to live in a rich town.

I'd feel better, though, if the city fathers would use the money for us residents instead of themselves.

FOR MOST ADULTS a letter of condolence is a tedious, painstaking obligation, says Louise Dameron our Wilton Manors correspondent.

To a child who did not know the meaning of such a letter it meant expressing himself quietly, unobtrusively and brought no confusion.

Recently when Norman Malcolm, often called the father of Wilton Manors, died, 13-year-old Tracy Stafford sat down and wrote a letter to the widow. Tracy is one of many children who treasured the friendship of the 82-year-old man's great wisdom and kindness.

* * * THE LETTER read: "Dear Mrs. Malcohn,

I will make the feeded from a coconut like he told me to, and hang it in our yard and every time I look at the feeder I will be reminded of a very fine man.

"I am 13 years old and very strong and I would like to help you like Mr. Malcolm helped me. When you need help in your yard or something from the grocery store please call on me. With Love. WHAT A TRIBUTE to Mr. Malcolm who came to Wilton Manors when it was a village. He took his place among the leaders and organized a civic group.

There's hardly a yard in Wilton Manors belonging to the earlier residents where a plant, donated by the Malcolms, doesn't exist. Never too busy to call on newcomers, Mr. Malcolm brought his offering of friendship with an invitation to become a part of the city he loved so well.

He and his wife worked tirelessly to establish the city library. He was president of the Library Association until shortly before his death.

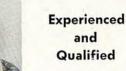

Always interested in the welfare of his community, county, state and country, he kept himself up-to-date on education and government, locally and nationally. He also was an active crusader against communism.

The home he and his wife shared for 59 years reflects their interest in books, art and beauty. An old-fashioned garden and bird sanctuary surround their home.

Tracy Stafford is indeed a fortunate boyhe knew Mr. Malcolm personally. Other children in that area might never know their benefactor but they will benefit from his having been here. Even in death his concern was for others — a memorial shelf is being established in the Wilton Manors City Library for the books requested bin lieu of flavors:

complex for adults will be ready for occupancy within a year. It will stand out as a landmark in the community, rising eleven stories into the beautiful Florida sky. There will be no obstructions of the view for miles in any direction. Designed as a luxury residence for New Thought people, it will take advantage of all the Florida assets making it the most desirable address in the area. Coordinator. Marty Sullivan, representing Passalaqua Builders, has assured us this new approach to leisure living will set a precedence and attract attention nationwide.

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS ON LUNDE TOWERS

Since the first indication that Lunde Towers would be built, we have been flooded with questions from hundreds of people regarding specific information about the project.

- 1. HOW MUCH IS THE RENT?
- Rental rates will run from $215 to $330. WHAT SIZE ARE THE APARTMENTS? The apartments will run from one bedroom, one bath, living room and kitchen to two bedrooms, two baths, living room
- and kitchen. HOW LARGE ARE THEY?
- The one bedroom, one bath will be approximately 679 square feet. The average two bedroom will be somewhere around 900 square feet, while some two bed-room, two bath apartments will be 1,040 square feet.
- 4 WHAT FACILITIES WILL BE AVAIL-ABLE?

The beautiful trees will all be left to create the park like front lawn running from the building to Middle River. There will be docks for boating and fishing, a heated swimming pool, putting green and shuffle board courts, a large meeting room on the first floor with a kitchenette attached for parties. It will also be available for lectures, motion pictures and special events. A craft room will be provided for painting, woodworking, etc. TRANSPORTATION? Most of the parking will be covered (under the building). However, an automobile will be unnecessary. The location of Lunde Towers is adjacent to a shopping center that will meet all basic needs. A shuttle bus will be on duty with regular trips to larger shopping centers, theaters, the beach, church, etc. 6. MEDICAL CARE?

- All forms of medical care have been excluded because every type of facility is available in the vicinity from clinics to nursing homes and hospitals. Medical care provided in retirement homes usually is inadequate and increases the cost to such a degree that founder's fees are re-quired. New Thought people have less need for this type of service than any other group. Those who are infirm should seek facilities that are so designed.
- MISCELLANEOUS INFORMÄTION. Storage lock bins are provided on every floor for each apartment as well as ample closet space in each apartment. Laundry facilities are also provided on every floor. A full time director will be on the premises twenty-four hours a day. Planned recreation will be available. Every apart-ment will be provided with a complete kitchen including a dishwasher. There are numerous restaurants nearby. Applications and complete brochures will be available in a few weeks. There will be luxurious carpeting throughout. The apartments are based on a one-year lease and are unfurnished because we cater to individual taste.

HOW TO BOOK MISS FLORIDA

 Booking requests should be received as far in advance as possible. At least two weeks is desirable in order to handle the appearance properly.

2. Include in your letter the date, time, place, how long you expect the appearance to last, and what "Miss Florida" will be expected to do.

3. A contract covering the appearance will be issued by Miss Florida's business manager. It should be executed in triplicate and all three copies returned to us. A copy will then be signed and returned by the business manager. This constitutes a firm commitment. The fee, plus expenses (these will be itemized), will be due and payable upon receipt of our statement following the completion of the appearance.

Neither Miss Florida nor her family can directly accept or reject a request for an appearance. All requests must be made through the Business Manager for Miss Florida.

4. Publicity photos are available upon request

NANCY STAFFORD Miss Florida 1976-1977

Nancy, a lovely 22-year-old graduate of the University of Florida, is a sixth generation Floridian and a native of Fort Lauderdale. She is 5'9'' tall, has blue eyes and light brown hair.

She completed her college education in three years, obtaining a Bachelor of Science degree in public relations, with a minor in marketing. Consistently on the dean's list, Nancy graduated in the top 5% of her class and was tapped into Kappa Tau Alpha National Journalism Honor Society. Other college honors include Alpha Lambda Delta Freshman-Sophomore National Honor Society and Sigma Tau Sigma Tutoring Society. She is also a member of the Public Relations Student Society of America (PRSSA).

Other experiences include membership to Chi Omega Sorority, University of Florida Choir, University of Florida Homecoming Queen candidate and Military Ball Queen first runner-up. Nancy served on the Broward County Bicentennial Committee and has been selected the State of Florida's Youth Chairman of the Arthritis Foundation.

Nancy is a pianist and enjoys both classical and popular music. Upon graduation from high school she received a music scholarship as the "outstanding senior." She has taught piano and been an accompanist for choirs, ensembles and musicals, as well as performing as a solo pianist.

Nancy's ambition is to obtain a Master's Degree in Marketing and eventually to establish her own public relations, advertising and marketing firm.

Her hobbies include modeling (she was a finalist in the 1976 Model of the Year Pageant in New York), gourmet cooking, needleworking, sewing and crocheting and antique collecting. Nancy has sky dived, is an avid racquet ball player and enjoys pocket billiards. Pageant vveek

Wilton Manors school celebrates 30th year

By Lori Alessi

"The thing I remember the most was the sand. The kids had to play in that dirt and sand because we didn't have grass around the school building," said apple-cheeked, white haired Susie Rae Meredith. Wilton Manors first, firstgrade school teacher is getting ready to kick up her heels a little tomorrow (Thursday) evening when the town's first and only school celebrates its 30th birthday. She has seen a lot of changes with the growth of the town and the school.

"We started out in 1951 with eight rooms in a field," said the now-retired school marm. "And, I think the land at one time must have been a dumping ground because glass kept coming up through the sand. Nevertheless, you couldn't beat the pride of the residents," she recalls. "Those first few years the townspeople would drop everything to come and help out at the school."

That was a long time ago. As the town grew, so did the school. Residents and guests will be able to relish that growth Thursday at 7 p.m. when the PTA hosts a gala open house to celebrate the school's 30th year. Expected to attend are such notables as the school board members, the superintendents, the principal, Mrs. Mary Crum, and city officials including Mayor James E. Maurer. Of course, Miss Meredith and other exfaculty members will be there.

Miss Meredith doesn't believe the basics of teaching have changed over the years, but she has seen a change in the kids.

"As far as teaching goes, I think teacher's today are well qualified. You have to treat a child like a person and children like limits. They need boundaries. You have to have a lot of patience, understanding and you have to love children. You also need a wealth of materials. These requirements don't change," Miss Meredith said. "The teachers who are in it just for the paycheck are the ones that don't make it," she says of the job that in her early days paid just $3,800 a year.

Admitting that teacher's jobs are tougher today, Miss Meredith points to the kids themselves and the legalitites of the job as the reasons.

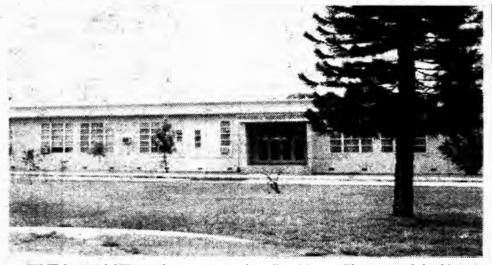

"Everyone loses their temper now and then and I think it's important for kids to see that, but the legal limits of what a teacher can and can't do today are restraining. And, the kids are different now from when I was teaching. They aren't so respectful of authority figures, and they're smarter. I never had the discipline problems that exist now," Meredith said.

Even though she frequently visits the school since retiring, Miss Meredith doesn't believe she'd like teaching today. "I used to love every minute of it while I was doing it, but my patience has gone a little and I don't think I could do it anymore."

Still, Meredith's record of successes is up there with the best of them. She has seen some of her students go on to become doctors, lawyers, and Ph.D's. Some are today involved in politics (some still in Wilton Manors) and Miss Meredith has even seen one of her little girls grow up to become Miss Florida. But probably most rewarding for Miss Meredith was the one young lady who interned in her class. She is now a teacher at Wilton Manors

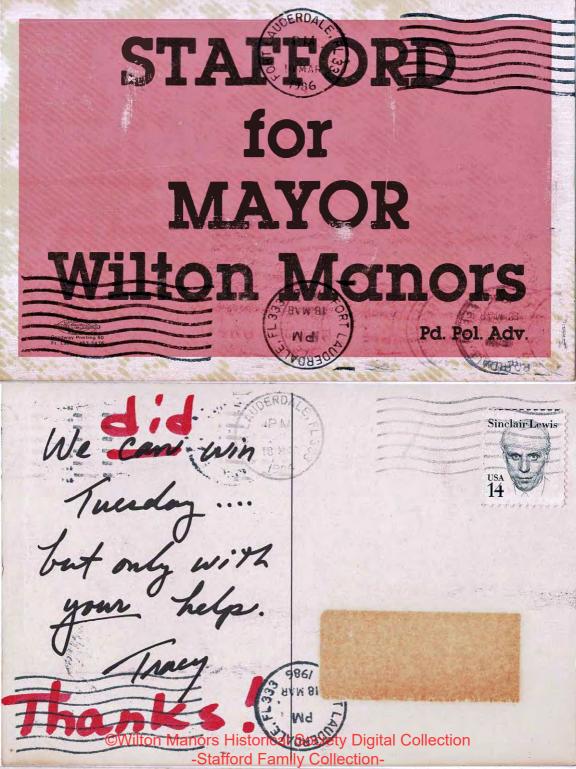

WILTON MANORS FIRST GRADE CLASS in 1951, the year the Elementary School opened. Teacher Susie Rae Meredith [right] will be among the guests at the School's celebration Thursday of its 30th anniversary.

TIME STANDS STILL. The entrance to the Wilton Manors Elementary School has not changed in the school's 30-year history. But everything else has. The growth of the school has radiated outward from the entrance to its present expanse off Northeast Third Avenue. NATURAL ALARM CLOCK

Parrots, characterized by their raucous behavior, are enjoyable, bird lover Kay Muser says. Despite the noise, Wilton Manors residents find flocks of wild, squawking parrots amusing.

WILD BIRDS OF WILTON MANORS

in the evening, prepared them for sleep with a lullaby so raucus and out of tune, only mis-wired ears could abide it.

In Wilton Manors, not only are people willing to put up with this squawking chorus, they love it.

"They're a natural alarm clock all year long, waking us as it gets light," says council member Sandy Steen, whose 28 years in Wilton Manors include 21 years in Townhouse Isle, the section where many of the birds roost.

"They were here long before I got here. A lot of birdwatchers come with telescopes to observe them," she says. "They make a great deal of noise but no one seems to mind this. You get used to it. It's part of nature and they're so beautiful. They leave about 6:30 a.m. and return at the same time every evening. No one knows where all of them go but large numbers have been seen in Pompano Beach and on Las Olas Boulevard, in Victoria Park and particularly in Cooley Park on the Intracoastal near First Presbyterian Church in Fort Lauderdale."

"They are terribly raucus," says Ken Hendricks, a retired art teacher from Fort Lauderdale High School. "But, we think the noise is very delightful, even when we're awakened by it."

"When we first moved here 20 years ago, there might have been just one pair but over time they've multiplied into hundreds," he says. "They seem to like ancient cypress trees and we have a large one in our yard. We don't see nests but we do know some dwell in holes in the "They're a natural alarm clock all year long, waking us as it gets light." — Sandy Steen trees. The cypress in front of our house has a large hole where they nest from time to time, singly or in groups of several. Maybe they like cypress trees partly because they're nut bearing. They break the nuts open, throw the hull down to the ground, pelting us. During the time trees are bearing the nuts, we see the parrots just sitting there. Occasionally they come all the way down to the ground and hop around looking for food. People don't put out food for them. The parrots fend for themselves."

"The parrots are built-in entertainment," says former Commissioner Marcia Stafford, the mother of the current mayor, Tracy Stafford. "Sometimes when I have people in to tea, we sit in my kitchen because the mango, avocado and poinciana trees in my yard are popular gathering spots for parrot socializing. The tree limbs are favorite seats for huge blocks of them and my guests hang over my kitchen sink watching them through the window."

Scott Miller is former city manager of Wilton Manors, now city manager of Oakland Park. "Each morning and evening, anywhere from 20 to 50 to hundreds of parrots fly over my house," he says. "They're very loud — they squawk while they fly. I don't know where they're going or what they do when they get there. Neither do I know what they do when they return home at night. Nor specifically where they roost. They seem to like very large and tall pine trees."

"Parrots are very enjoyable," says Kay Muser who, with Michael Moll, owns Everglades Aviaries Inc. on South Dixie Highway. "I don't know too many people who are upset that they're here."

However, this isn't a time for visitors to come hoping to look up into the trees hoping to catch a glimpse of hundreds of birds sitting together, she says. From now until mid-summer is mating season which means they will stay somewhat out of sight, though in the case of the parrots, out of sight does not mean out of mind.

Parrots may be escapees from a shipment in 1952

No one is absolutely sure how Wilton Manors' wild parrots got here in the first place. Although many years ago the United States had an indigenous parakeet population, is now extinct. Aside from this, parrots are not native to Florida.

"I understand one of the oldest flocks of our big parrots were part of a shipment which arrived in South Florida in 1952 from South America and escaped shortly thereafter. Others are believed to be escaped pets which have done well in our environment," says Kay Muser who, with Michael Moll, owns Everglades Aviaries Inc. on Old Dixie Highway. Both are considered by many residents to be experts on the subject.

According to Muser, Wilton Manors now has several flocks of Amazons and conures, also called cheeks or Mexican redheads. Both are large birds though the Amazon is short-tailed and heavy and the conure is more slender and has a long, pointy tail. Presently large flocks flourish here all the way from South Miami to Palm Beach. Part of the reason is the food supply provided by our variety of flowering shrubs and nut-bearing trees."

It helps, also, that with the exception of hawks, parrots really have no enemies, Muser says. "Neither do they offer any known threat to indigenous birds seeking food or nesting sites."

However, the hawk is enough and inspires bird-like vigilance. When a hawk flies by, the parrots become quiet and look up into the sky.

1 1 Leslie W. Stafford was born in Beaumont, Texas in 1918. He came to Miami in Time to well remember the infamous 1926 hurricane. Marcia Sawyer Stafford was born in December, 1921 in Miami and weathered the "Big One "too. Les and Marcia were both educated in Miami and married there in 1945. 1947 found them in Forthauderdale, where hes' job transfer brought them. home, the Statfords bought a lot in Wilton Manors for Dave Turner, who was Mayor at that time. The Statfords choice of a lot was Largely influenced by the fact that Mayor Turner had given upon which Wilton Manons Elementary School is mon located.

Marcia, with other young mothers, spent lots of hours at School Board Meetings unging the construction of the school. The usual response to their plea was "Wilton Manors will never need a school".

The school was finally constructed and then parents! gathered regularly at the school ground to landsape and clear the property. Bushels and bushels and bushels of emply liquor bottles were removed from the Southeast corner of the lot. Many of these were just under the surface of sugarsand. This accumulation was the result of a "house of ill regute", a gambling hall and a "gin mill". which had been located for years directly across the street from that corner of the school property. Later that building became a nursing home, but has now been demolished. Les worked long hours as office manager of

I Eliwitt Cigar and tobacco Company but did much of the actual Construction of his home. As soon as the Staffords, who had been joined "settled-in" Marcia was encouraged to run for the elected office of City Clerk, which office she held from 1952 to 1960. Except for Council Meetings, which were held in a community building (this property donated to the City by Dave Turner also - and now the cite of the present library), business was conducted and records of the City were held in the statford home. Marcia was City Clerk, Court Clerk, and the public's contact with the City government. Citizens registered to vote with Marcia also. PERSONAL BIOGRAPHY

In 1949 Les, Tracy and I moved into a quiet, warm and friendly Wilton Manors...no city water, no sewer system, no parks, no public school ... Wilton Manors was a babe!

Between 1951 and 1976 it was my honor and joy to be part of the government of Wilton Manors and to see a water system, sewer system, roads, parks and recreation facilities added. Due to outstanding efforts on the part of concerned citizens we saw churches, a library, civic association and Wilton Manors Elementary School developed and I was privileged to share in some of those accomplishments.

WILTON MANORS, Island City

Marcia Stafford Page Two

For twenty years I taught kindergarten in Wilton Manors. Some of those children still live here and bring their children by to visit. There have certainly been physical changes but the residents have remained neighbors, caring about the City we proudly call home.

My true "claims to fame" are our children who reflect the solid home town atmosphere in which they grew up. Tracy is an attorney and State Legislator and Nancy has the female lead on "Matlock" as well as being the spokesperson for Waterbed City.

My being selected, especially this year, is an honor which I accept humbly since I know how many deserving women are in Wilton Manors. I am housebound (but emotionally and spiritually I'm great) and will be unable to attend the ceremony on March 3rd. Tracy, his father and Nancy will be in Tallahassee for the opening session of the Legislature but we will all be at the Broward County Historical Commission meeting in spirit. THE WAY VE WERE

SOUTH FLORIDA

Torrential rains, hurricanes and shaky water-control policies conspired to make the flood of 1947 the most devastating in state history

> OUTH FLORIDA WAS BEGINning to look like the Mojave Desert. In the Everglades, muck caught fire and blazed out of control, darkening the skies along the coast. Salt water moved inland through drainage canals and the underlying rock, threatening the precious drinking water of South Floridians.

> Throughout much of 1944 and 1945, citrus growers and cattlemen looked at the skies and wondered: Will it ever rain again?

But by September 1947, they were asking: Will the rain ever stop?

That year, some 100 inches of rain fell on South Florida, more than tripling the region's total rainfall for 1945 and ending one of the worst droughts in Florida history. In a few weeks the rain had drenched farmland and filled lakes and canals.

Then, in the space of just 25 days, two hurricanes and a tropical disturbance dumped enough water on an already saturated area to inspire the return of Noah and his Ark.

When the sun finally broke through again in November, it shone down on an inland sea — 5 million acres of water stretching from Lake Okeechobee across the Everglades and the Big Cypress Swamp to Broward and Dade counties.

Ninety percent of eastern Florida, from Orlando to the Keys, was under water. In Davie, with its vast acreage in citrus groves and cattle lands, the water was waist-deep, and in Fort Lauderdale, waves were washing across Las Olas Boulevard. Weary horses and cattle stood forlornly on levees in western Broward and Palm Beach counties, sharing what little high ground remained with deer, wildcats, raccoons and rattlesnakes.

People whose property was threatened by water backed up by dams and locks attempted to dynamite them, but were faced down by people packing guns to guard the dams that were holding back the waters from their homes and farms.

In a primitive struggle for survival, neighbor confronted neighbor.

SUNSHINE, September 9, 1990 19

The Great Flood of 1947 started on March 1 when a squall line dumped a welcome six inches of water on the parched agricultural lands of the upper Everglades. Rain was plentiful in April and May, and then in June became so heavy that chairman Dewey Hilsabeck called an emergency meeting of the Everglades Drainage District (EDD), which had jurisdiction over a vast network of drainage canals, dams, levees, locks, water-control structures and hurricane gates.

By opening the hurricane gates at Lake Okeechobee, for example, the EDD could drain excess water from the upper Glades into the lake, purposely kept low for just such an emergency.

But when the torrential rains came in 1947, the EDD was starved for funds to pursue its flood control program, and chief engineer Lamar Johnson was a worried man when he learned that a hurricane had formed on Sept. 9 in the Atlantic. Slowly the hurricane worked its way across the Caribbean, battering Puerto Rico and the Bahamas, and then took direct aim at Florida.

Suddenly the huge storm swerved north, and South Florida breathed a sigh of relief. Out of the blue, however, the hurricane turned, came back, and on Sept. 17 smashed into the mainland. Its winds were clocked at 155 miles per hour at the Hillsboro Lighthouse.

A LMOST IMMEDIATELY, ALL hell broke loose. In Fort Lauderdale, the New River overflowed its banks, and white-caps broke over downtown, flooding luxury homes on the finger isles. Salt water destroyed Dania's tomato crop and rain water drowned the orange groves of Davie and the beanfields of Pompano Beach. Migrant workers near Lake Okeechobee were evacuated to higher ground.

In West Palm Beach the National Guard was called out, and President Harry Truman declared a state of emergency.

Especially ominous was the head of water pouring into Lake Okeechobee from the Kissimmee River Valley. Because the lake was already full, the water had just one place to go — south to Fort Lauderdale and Miami through swollen canals.

Fears were especially high at Belle Glade, on Okeechobee's south shore, which was under water. A hurricane tidal wave had drowned nearly 2,000 people in the area in 1928, a tragedy still horrifyingly vivid to many living on the lakeside.

Already, farm dikes near the lake were crumbling. The levee at one farm collapsed completely, flooding 3,000 acres of beans and celery.

To help drain water on the lake's south shore, boards were removed from the South Bay locks. The released water then roared south down the North New River Canal, which would shortly deliver it to Davie.

That night a small group of men crept in and restored the boards. The Palm Beach County sheriff called them "vigilantes," assuming they came from Davie. The district removed the boards, but again the vigilantes replaced them.

"Somebody out there might get shot," the sheriff warned.

In Davie, things were already in bad shape. A local cattleman had asked the courts for an injunction to block the closing of a dike west of town because, though the closed dike would help citrus groves to the east, it would continue to flood his land.

This was the heart of the problem. Relief for the cattlemen meant disaster for the grove owners, and vice versa.

No quick solution was in sight — and then, unbelievably, things got worse.

A small tropical disturbance hit South Florida on Sept. 28, dropping seven inches of rain in a 24-hour period. Abnormally high tides backed up the water into rivers and canals.

"Fifty miles of water from the Everglades is moving this way," Sheriff Walter Clark warned a terrified Broward County, as he deputized armed guards to protect county dikes.

Water began pouring into Pompano Beach, flooding the section of town near Hammondville Road. And by Oct. 2, people were being evacuated from their flooded homes in Davie to the Naval Air Station at the Fort Lauderdale airport.

People still living in Davie listened in dismay to reports of a head of water, now 60 miles long, pushing its way south from the upper Glades.

Only one thing worked in their favor: A temporary dam near the State Road 84 bridge had been thrown up by the Army Corps of Engineers. This would ease the problem — or so everyone thought.

But as the water began to drop in Davie, it began to rise in Hacienda Flores, a housing development to the east. Hacienda developers asked the Corps of Engineers for permission to dynamite the new dam, and when the Corps refused, developer P.C. Collier called for a meeting of residents.

"If nothing has been done by meeting time," said Collier ominously, "we'll remove the dam by whatever means are necessary."

"No one is going to blow up the dam," retorted Sheriff Clark, trying to maintain calm. "If the dam should be removed, it will be done in an orderly manner and under the proper supervision."

CONFLICT AND CONFUSION WERE DEveloping everywhere.

Policy changes moved as swiftly as the flood currents. One day after approving the highway department's request to open the locks, the Broward Drainage District asked the state to close them again.

Just as quickly, the district reversed itself on the State Road 84 dam. Board members met at the dam in the rain and were greeted by 200 people carrying shovels and shouting, "Blow it up!" The board promptly voted to open the dam. Later, P.C. Collier reported that the wa-

Later, P.C. Collier reported that the waters in his groves had dropped 11 inches in 12 hours. In Davie, however, water rose eight inches in the same period. Citrus man Harry Earle estimated that 700,000 trees had been lost in the flood.

People began consoling themselves with the thought that the situation could not possibly get worse.

They were wrong.

s I decorate our Christmas tree, I'm flooded with sweet memories. Every ornament holds significance and is infused with love because it was made by my mother, Marcia Sawyer Stafford. Each one is unique, sparkling, elegant—just like mom—encrusted with glimmering jewels, pearls and beads. The tree is luminous with the soft glow of faceted gems, gold braid, satin and velvet. No Fabergé egg in any museum could compare with her ornaments.

The tradition began the year I was born, and year by year the collection grows. The journey of my life can be traced through my mother's ornaments like a road map. At age eight, when I got my first pair of little blue eyeglasses, she made a blue ornament with an intricate design of iridescent stones.

"My mother's ornaments are works of art." A shiny crystal-beaded ornament, swagged and crisscrossed in a spiderweb of orthodontia-looking silver braid, marked the year I got my braces. The purple satin ball with the triumphant gold crown on top was made the year I was Miss Florida. A rainbow-colored fan of jewels and peacock feathers marked my first NBC-TV series. The oval, rosecolored satin bell covered in seed pearls and lace snipped from my wedding gown celebrated the year I was married.

But my most treasured ornament is the one my mother gave me last year—white and gold, the bottom tassel made from the pendant of her favorite gold necklace. It is the same necklace I played with every night as a child when she'd rock me in her lap at bedtime, softly singing "I Come to the Garden Alone."

Mom's ornaments are beautiful. Truly works of art. But more, they are expressions of her life, her creativity and her love, invaluable treasures that remind me of our life together and how well she knows me.

I believe they're also a picture of how intimately God knows us. This holiday, may you rest in the knowledge that every unique detail and facet of your being is known by a caring Father who pours out His life, creativity and love for you. And as that reality floods your heart, may you radiate with a rich and luminous glow—like Mom's ornaments.

ACTRESS NANCY STAFFORD is used to the spotlight, but one of the brightest moments in her Christmas season is the joy she feels as she decorates the branches of her tree with cherished handmade ornaments each lovingly created by her mom.

My ornaments are my favorite tradition. Each Christmas, as I "dress" our tree, I'm flooded with sweet memories. Every ornament holds significance. Every ornament is infused with love. Every ornament was made by my mother. Each one is unique, sparkling, and elegant . . . like my mom.

Encrusted with glimmering jewels and pearls and beads, the tree is luminous with the soft glow of faceted gems, gold braid, satin and velvet. Not even Fabergé eggs in a museum could compare to my mom's lovingly crafted ornaments.

The tradition of making handmade ornaments began the year I was born, and year-by-year, the collection grew. The journey of my life can be traced through mom's ornaments like a roadmap.

The year I was eight was the year I got my first pair of little blue eyeglasses. To commemorate this event, mom made a blue ornament with an intricate design of iridescent stones. Another year, a shiny silver beaded ornament, swagged and crisscrossed with a spiderweb of orthodontia-inspired wire and braid, marked the year I got braces.

By 1976, I had emerged from adolescence and was crowned Miss Florida. Mom remembered this special time

"WHATEVER YOU ARE GOING THROUGH RIGHT NOW, YOU MUST trust that god is with you."

by creating a purple satin ball topped with the triumphant gold crown of the "King of Kings"—a reminder that there is more to life than my tiara.

When I began my television-acting career with a part on the NBC soap opera The Doctors, mom's annual ornament was a rainbow-colored fan of jewels and peacock feathers in homage to the "peacock network."

In 1983, when I joined the cast of the Emmy-winning hospital drama St Elsewhere, mom fashioned an oblong gold ornament that looked suspiciously like the Emmy statuette.

And, when I became Matlock's law partner in 1986, mom created a silvery blue ball that looked strikingly similar to my co-star Andy Griffith's gray seersucker suit!

Later, when I became an author, a beautiful ball encircled with mirrors reflected the theme of my first title, Beauty by the Book: Seeing Yourself as God Sees You—my reminder to readers to look in the true mirror of God's Word for beauty and worth and to see themselves as He does. And, when The Wonder of His Love: A Journey into the Heart of God was published, mom made a heart-shaped ball, echoing my invitation to readers to journey deeper into the heart of God's infinite love.

In addition to marking professional milestones in my life, mom's ornaments also celebrated personal ones. Throughout the years, mom's ornaments have chronicled events in my life both big and small, joyous and heartbreaking just like life itself.

An oval rose-colored satin ball covered in seed pearls and lace snipped from my wedding gown celebrated the year I was married.

The year my daddy died, mom covered an ornament with a swatch of his favorite plaid work shirt. It still smells like Old Spice, and every year when I unwrap it, I hold that ornament close to my face, breathe in his memory, the loving fragrance of his life, and thank God for allowing me to be his daughter.

Mom's angel ornament was especially significant: I never had the blessing of children of my own. After two devastating and heart-crushing miscarriages, mom made an angel ornament that gave me a glimpse beyond the realm of earth, the assurance and comforting reminder that I have two babies in the arms of Jesus—and I will one day hold them in heaven.

(Opposite) The beautiful ornaments that grace Nancy's tree are special reminders of her mom's love for her, but they also remind her of God's love for her. She says, "God knows our fears and delights, every pain, joy, and dream. He knows us completely and accepts us unconditionally."

The year that followed the miscarriages was equally painful, with two failed adoption attempts. At the time, I was co-starring in a TV movie called A Child Too Many, about an infertile couple who hire a surrogate to have their baby, and then lose the child in a custody battle. The movie theme mirrored my pain. But mom's ornament helped soothe my wounded heart. She covered a ball with canvas tent fabric and circled it with tiny hand-hewn wooden tent pegs. I recognized it immediately-Isaiah 54: "Sing O barren woman, you who never bore a child; burst into song, shout for joy . . . more are the children of the desolate woman than of her who has a husband . . . Enlarge the place of your tent, stretch your tent curtains wide . . . for you will spread out to the right and to the left."

This ornament reminds me that I do have the blessing of many children in my life—spiritual children, women I'm privileged to minister to around the country through my speaking and books, a slew of incredible godchildren, a beautiful stepdaughter, and a 9-year-old grandson. God has enlarged the place of my tent!

Though I've been blessed to experience success as an actress, speaker, and writer, I have also faced crushing circumstances and painful disappointments: financial crisis, unemployment, health challenges, and a huge forest fire, followed by mud slides the following winter, that left the ranch retreat center my husband and I had built scorched and decimated.

But in the midst of those difficult circumstances, mom made what is perhaps the most beautiful ornament of all: a ball covered in rough, gritty sandpaper and scattered with beautiful pearls. It serves as a reminder to me that the beauty of a pearl is produced through pain. As a grain of sand invades its shell, the oyster releases a healing fluid until finally the irritant is covered—creating a pearl. Without the irritant, it's just an oyster. No pain—no pearl. No trial and testing—no treasure. "LIKE THESE ORNAMENTS, GOD MADE EACH ONE OF US UTTERLY UNIQUE, HIS WORKS OF ART."

CWilton Manors Historical Society Digital Collection -Stafford Family CollectionSo the deeper meaning I see in mom's sandpaper and pearl ornament is that whatever you're going through right now, you must trust that God is with you through all your difficult circumstances. He is grinding you, polishing you, and preparing you to be his luminous pearl and sparkling jewel.

Mom is 90 now, in a nursing home, and nearly blind—macular degeneration has stolen her vision. A few years ago, she gave me the last ornament she was able to make. It's my favorite white and gold with a bottom tassel made of the pendant from mom's favorite gold necklace. I played with it every night as a child as she rocked me in her lap at bedtime, softly singing her favorite hymn, "I Come to the Garden Alone." I wrote about this in my book The Wonder of His Love, in a chapter called "Comforting Love."

Mom's ornaments are beautiful. Truly works of art. But more, they are expressions of her creativity and her love invaluable treasures that remind me of our life together and how well she knows me.

But more than that, I believe, the ornaments are also a "picture," intended to provide a glimpse of how intimately God knows us. He knows our entire lives, from beginning to end, since before we were ever born, before the earth was ever created. Like these ornaments, He made each one of us utterly unique, His exclusive works of art.

This Christmas, my wish is that you might rest in the knowledge that every unique detail and "facet" of your life is known by a loving Father, who pours out His life and love for you. As that reality floods your heart, may you shine with a rich and luminous glow—just like mom's ornaments!

REMEMBERING WILTON MANORS FIRST COUNCILWOMAN

by Mary Ulm Wilton Manors Historical Society

Wilton Manors Pioneer Marcia Stafford died on January 15, 2011 at age 89. A fourth generation

Floridian born in Miami, she served as a City of Wilton Manors elected official for over two decades, first as City Clerk for eight years and then as a Council Member for over 14 years. No other Wilton Manors elected official exceeds her tenure.

Marcia, her husband Leslie Stafford, and one-year old son Tracy moved to Wilton Manors in 1949 when the village was two years old. Leslie Stafford, an office manager with the Eli Witt Cigar and Tobacco Company, performed much of the construction on the family home on NE 25th Street. Marcia took great pride in her husband's handy work.

Village Mayor Dave Turner had donated land upon which to build an elementary school, but county school board officials balked at the idea that a school was needed in Wilton Manors. With other young mothers, Marcia persisted in trying to change that opinion, aided at times by the restless fidgeting and vocalizations of young toddler Tracy.

Marcia enjoyed telling the story of her and other parents preparing the school ground for opening. At one point during their landscaping they began unearthing hundreds of empty liquor bottles. These were apparently the legacy of what early residents politely called a "gentlemen's club" of questionable repute, that had once operated across the street.

tion she held until 1960. While Council meetings were held at the Village Hall, much of the rest of City business was conducted at the Stafford home until the first City Hall with real offices opened in 1957. Thus, daughter Nancy, born in 1954, and young Tracy spent their formative years amidst the constant comings-and-goings of Wilton Manors citizens and politicians.

In 1961, Marcia became the first woman to serve on the Wilton Manors City Council. An intelligent, witty, and charismatic public servant, she held the citizens' confidence for a record 14 years and 10 months. "I can think of no one who gathered as much good will for the City as Marcia Stafford," recalls long-time resident Nancy Sawallis. "Marcia was well liked by everyone." Wilton Manors Woman's Club President Gwen Thompson agrees, saying: "She was a wonderful inspiration and a long-time club member."

No doubt Marcia could have continued her long and successful run as the only female on the City Council had she not chosen a different course for her career. In 1975, she resigned as Councilwoman to support son Tracy's bid for a position on that body; a seat he ultimately won.

During her long tenure as an elected public official, Marcia Stafford participated in the addition of a water system, sewer system, roads, parks and recreation facilities as the city's population grew from 1,500 in 1952 to well over 10,000 in 1975. However, her "true claim to fame", as she wrote in a short biography in 1991, was her and Leslie's children, "...who reflect the home town atmosphere in which they grew up". Son Tracy has led a distinguished career as an attorney, Wilton Manors City Council Member and Mayor, and State Representative. Daughter Nancy was crowned Miss Florida in 1976. She is an accomplished actress, motivational speaker, and author.

After leaving elected office, Marcia continued to enrich the Wilton Manors community by teaching kindergarten and reading to children in the Wilton Manors public library. Leslie Stafford retired in 1977 and Marcia joined him in retirement several years later. Leslie died in 1995.
